LEGENDS AND HISTORY

A UNIQUE EUROPEAN SITE

The Gouffre de Padirac, the most renowned of its kind in Europe, is regarded as one of France's greatest geological wonders. It was first explored in 1889 by Edouard-Alfred Martel, a lawyer by training, the father of modern speleology (i.e. caving or potholing).

The history of the Gouffre is intimately linked with the life of this intrepid explorer, whose many discoveries were instrumental in the birth of this discipline.

It was on 9 July 1889 that Edouard-Alfred Martel, equipped with heavy rope ladders and candles, first descended into this abyss, known as "the devil's hole" to superstitious locals.

Indeed, the Gouffre de Padirac has always fired people's imaginations, giving rise to the legends of the Causses du Quercy, a limestone plateau.

"Wide open and well lit; there was nothing so terrible about this chasm, compared with the dark, narrow and far more secluded potholes of the other limestone formations. But, just like the others, it was frightening, and no one dreamed of examining it in detail."

Extract from: "Les Abîmes" by Edouard-Alfred Martel (pub. Delagrave, 1894)
